

Changes in Scholarly Communication and the Potential Impact on Biocuration

Philip Bourne

Open access in particular and changes in on-line scholarship have the potential to impact biocuration which often involves translating information currently read in papers to knowledge that is found in a variety of biological resources. The implication of these changes in scholarly communication to the biocuration process will be discussed with references to our work and that of others.