

All these things not entirely made by me

Chris Thorpe

Crowdsourcing or building a set of content or annotations through the actions of a community is nothing new to a biodata audience. However there are many interesting examples from the wider web about how the joint actions of openness, game mechanics and identity provide a very high quality of data and highly active group of participants.